

Tips to help you during National Preparedness Month

Author – Julene Reese

The fear of not knowing what to do in the event of a disaster, how to gather and care for loved ones and how to survive until help arrives can be more traumatizing than the actual disaster.

According to Carolyn Washburn, Utah State University Extension associate professor, by taking the time to prepare now, families can diminish fear and loss in the event of a future calamity.

September is National Preparedness Month, a great time for people to begin designing a family preparedness plan. The Ready Campaign and Citizen Corp organizations are now in their 11th year of encouraging awareness and preparedness for families and are helpful resources.

Disasters affect thousands of people every year in the United States and worldwide, disrupting daily functions and leaving lasting effects, but the American Red Cross reports that only 65 percent of American's have emergency preparedness plans in place.

“When families have a plan in place, each family member can feel a sense of security and have the necessary tools to survive,” said Washburn. “For Utah, the biggest threat is a major earthquake; however, the most common occurrences are floods, which affect and destroy many homes and properties each year, and wildfires that rage throughout the state projecting heat, ash and smoke. It may be impossible for your family to prepare for all disasters, but they should be informed of the most likely disasters and have a plan in place.”

Washburn recommends building an emergency plan with the following:

- Points of contact – Make sure that family members know how and where to reunite with each other.
- Secure food – Begin with a 3-week supply and then work toward building a longer-term supply.
- Additional items – Include batteries, flashlights, gas and portable radio.

- 72-96 hour emergency kits – Have one for each family member (including pets) and one for each vehicle. According to Cindy Nelson, USU Extension assistant professor, the following contents should be included: first aid kit, including basic first aid supplies and necessary medications for allergies, pain, etc.; snacks, water, non-perishable foods and a can opener; water bottle with a purifier or a filter so water from a stream or melted snow can be used; emergency thermal blanket to provide warmth or shelter; warm clothing including gloves; microfiber towels that are highly absorbent and quick drying and/or compressed towels to save space; tissues or toilet paper; diapers for those with young children; matches or a lighter; cash (small bills); notebook and pen; contact information for family members, doctor, insurance, mechanic, etc., either on a piece of paper or stored in a cell phone; and car charger for cell phone as well as a backup charger that is either battery or solar powered.

According to the National Terror Alert Response Center, no matter who you are or where you live, you can be touched or devastated by a calamity, terrorist attack or natural disaster. Preparing for an emergency now provides the best chance of survival. Emergency preparedness should always be considered in the home, workplace and school. “Once you are prepared, help others build their emergency plans so we have safe, strong communities,” Washburn said.

Utah Prepare Conference and Expo

UTAH PREPARE CONFERENCE & EXPO

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 2014
8 AM - 8 PM

Saturday, September 27, 2014
South Towne Expo Center, Sandy, Utah
Utah's Largest

Preparedness Conference and Expo
50+ Exhibitors | 30+ Preparedness Classes

Utahns interested in learning about emergency preparedness can visit the South Towne Expo Center in Sandy on Saturday, Sept. 27, from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. for workshops, speakers, emergency preparedness vendors, door prizes and giveaways.

“We began this Utah State University Extension-sponsored conference in 2009 to help people understand that there are things they can do to be in charge, even when there is much out of their control during an emergency,” said Teresa Hunsaker, USU Extension family and consumer sciences agent. “By thinking ahead and having necessary items on hand, they can better ride out the storm, so to speak.”

Workshop topics include mock root cellars, meals in minutes with food storage, sheltering in place, emergency fuel storage, emergency communications, emergency childbirth, powerless cooking, special needs preparation, survival tips from the experts, water purification, preparedness and terrorism, water and emergency first aid.

Keynote speaker is Jim Phillips, emergency preparedness and cold-weather survival expert. He developed an entire preparedness curriculum by asking himself the question “What if?” and then setting out to discover what actually does and does not work. He has taught thousands of classes across the United States for 40 years.

“We really try to have this be a one-stop shop where Utahns can become educated and learn what they can do to help themselves, their families and their pets in the event of a barrage of emergency scenarios,” said Hunsaker. “Our goal is to help keep damage and casualties to a minimum should one of these events take place.”

Cost of the conference is $8 with a $1 discount when ordered online with the promo code “prepare.” Tickets are available online or at the door.
